

Introducing the HQ Network

HQ NETWORK

A Private Group Network designed for closed communication in groups

HQ Network

What is it?

Allow us to introduce the concept of a Private Group Network or 'PGN' as we call it for short.

It's an online space where you strengthen connections with your real communities

No digital footprint.

No name search.

No behaviour profiling or targeting.

With HQ Network, it's private, it's all yours and you control who you're connected to.

Create unlimited groups to establish relevant communication boundaries.

A simple idea - Setting up separate groups keeps your content confined to those that you choose to share with.

Permission based controls and custom communication features of the HQ Network, provide specific private group communication for "multicasting" (also sometimes referred to as narrowcasting) – meaning sending your message to a defined group of people only. Multicasting differs from traditional networking models where you would "broadcast" a message – meaning to a large undefined audience, to anyone who is connected.

The world of online communication has grown up and become more refined as people look for alternative ways to communicate. The HQ Network is a more specific communication tool for real-time and practical solutions for any type of group.

We have a few different versions that you may find will suit your needs.

If you are looking for something off the shelf and simple to use, you could try one of these versions that we prepared earlier:

If you have something more specific in mind, you can order a 'custom designed, fully branded with specialised features HQ' made just for your group.

HQ Network

What do you get?

The HQ Networks all offer a great set of features that help you interact, engage, create culture, create a sense of community, keep connected and stay entertained and informed.

At the same time, The HQ network protects your online privacy, keeps your digital footprint intact and brings the opportunity of communication to people who, for lots of reasons, don't want to share everything with everyone.

Quick Bits

No technical knowledge needed – easy to get started

Share with your communities and not the world

Reduced risk of online profile stalking and cyberbullying behaviours

Private alternative to the public social networks

A protected haven for children and families to communicate

Why not a public social network?

Simple. Not everything you talk about was meant for sharing with a worldwide audience. There are plenty of reasons to communicate in a closed group and here are some of them:

It's an online space where you strengthen connections with your real communities

You can communicate detailed information without worrying about broadcasting it to strangers

Information about children can be protected

Information you share in a private network is not about creating listings in Google - your digital footprint remains protected.

When it is just news for family, or just for friends, or just for a work project or just for your sports team, in other words – when your news is not for everyone!

A professional man in a dark suit and tie is shown from the chest up, looking thoughtfully upwards while holding a black smartphone to his ear with his left hand. He is wearing a black leather watch on his left wrist. The background is a blurred outdoor scene with trees and a building, suggesting an urban environment.

Today's business world poses many risks and challenges when trying to manage communications. There is a huge amount of email to deal with everyday,

Then there's the brand management issue of trying to protect the public exposure of company related chatter. HQ Network provides a way to deal with all of these problems, as well as improve staff morale through engagement and interaction on a private network.
